

The clock is ticking for Canadian jobs

ACTIVISTS There was an ominous black van driving the streets of Calgary yesterday. Or was it a clock?

On May 6, the National Unemployment Clock started its nationwide road trip to raise awareness on the dangers of allowing corporations to offshore Canadian jobs. The side of the truck is sporting a real-time count of job loss in Canada. A street team with the clock is asking people to sign a petition that will be given to Prime Minister Stephen Harper to help keep jobs in the country.
